There seems to be a misapprehension concerning the color of the inhabitants should have maintained itself all these centuries among the Turks. The name may be misleading, but it has reference to the color of the mountains rather than that of the inhabitants, for, while many of them are as brown as an Ameriweather, I do not think there is one colored person in the entire principality.

The Montenegrans still belong to that faith, and their ancestors came to this bleak and dreary country for the same reason that the Pilgrim fathers went to New Sultan at Constantinople by invitation and the results of the royal family and the officers of the army. Nicholas once visited the exsultan at Constantinople by invitation England, in order that they might worship God in their own way. These exiles suffered persecution from the Mo-hammedans for many years before they left their homes, and, being unable to endure it any longer, they were led over a range of mountains to new homes, where they were ruled by their priests.

Church and State United. From 1460 to 1851 the executive authority in Montenegro was exercised by vladikas, or prince bishops as they were called, the same man being the head of performed the ecclesiastical functions of a patriarch of the Orthodox Greek Church but about 1696 a powerful and progressive leader named Babylas founded the present dynasty, and, as the vladika was not the present ruler of Montenegro, is the second who has not been ordained as a riest. He simply refused to assume ecidolized him as a young man, unanithe country wherever mously sustained him in his violation of enough to support them. precedent. Ecclesiastical authority is therefore exercised by a regular bishop elected by the clergy. Babylas must have been a far-sighted man, for he established a printing press, where a number of devotional books and several volumes of laws and regulations were published by him early in the eighteenth century, but from that time until 1850 Montenegro had no newspaper and no books, being too much occupied in defending itself against the Turks to pay much attention to literature or theology. Thus you will see that Montenegro is inique among nations. Although it has only 250,000 inhabitants, they are all chiefs and princes, and a series of brilliant marriages by the sons and daughters of Prince Nicholas prove that the royal houses of Europe consider the blood of the royal house of Montenegro as good

Men Too Proud to Work. Up to the time of Cladika, Peter II. who reigned from 1830 to 1851, the Montenegrins were a race of barbarians, living in thatched huts similar to those of the peasants in Connemara, on the bleak west coast of Ireland. The women did all the work and were literally beasts of ourden. The men were too dignified an too proud to labor. They were professional varriors, like the American Indians, and considered menial tasks beneath them Theirs has been compared to the Homeric state of society at the time of "The Iliad," when war and poetry were the subsidized minstrels to extol their

The vendetta has always prevailed in Montenegro, and other romantic notions were realized in the life and history of this people until the reign of Prince Peter, who labered for twenty-one years in the regeneration of his subjects, which was successful to a remarkable degree and within that short space of time they made rapid advances in civilization. His successor, Danilo, carried on his work until 1860, when he was assassinated and
